Measure

If you already have blueprints or technical drawings in .dwg format (Autocad) it is preferable and you probably don't need to measure.

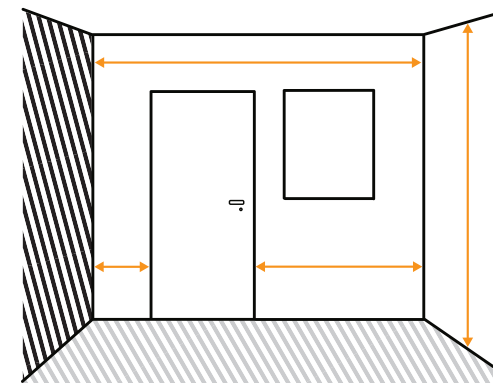

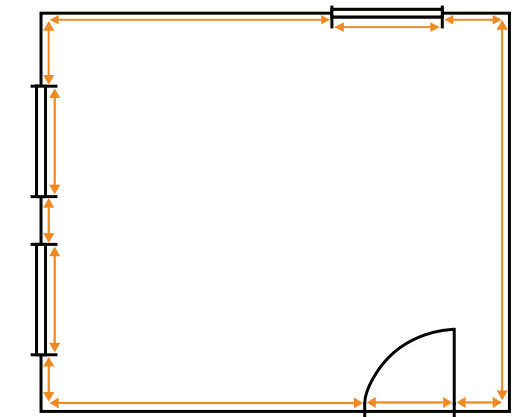

Measure carefully

Measuring your room is not difficult, but it is important to have the right measurements, as they will be the basis of your planning.

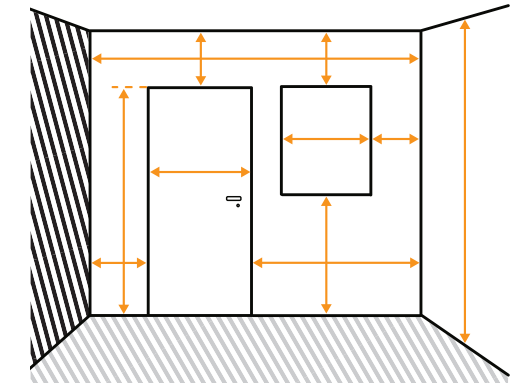

Take the time you need to take the exact measurements.

Take measurements in millimeters to ensure that they are as exact as possible. Please ensure that they are easy to read and understand. Here we show you how to do it.

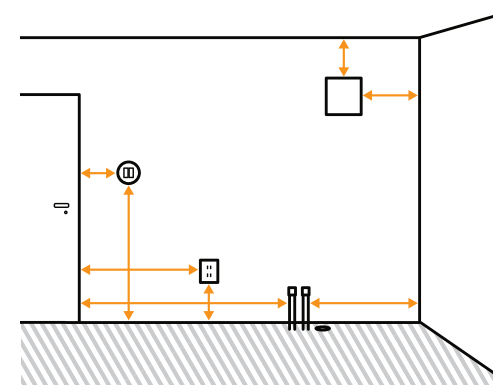

A: Measure the room

01 Start by measuring the distance from the floor to the ceiling, the distance between walls and between corners and doors.

02 Measure the windows and the distance between them and the floor, ceiling and corners. Measure the free available area, without door lining etc. Do the same with the door (s).

03 Measure everything that stands out in the space, such as radiators, ducts and pipes. Measure also existing furniture that you would like to keep.

Measure and note the location of the sockets and switches. Point out the location where you would like to place new switches and sockets.

Note the location of TV and other electrical outlets. If you are thinking of placing them elsewhere in the room, note the new location.

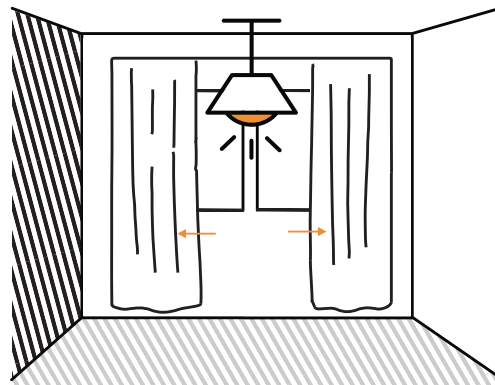

Take the photos

Prepare the room

An overly packed room will give an impression of reduced space. To avoid this, remove what is not necessary in the photo, while leaving a little life that describes the room and what you would like to keep.

Take care of the light

Preferrably use the morning or the end of the day to take your photos, the light is softer and the colours will be more accurate. Open your curtains and turn on your lights for maximum brightness.

Take care of the angles and alignemnt, your photos serve as a model for our 3D projections. If you have the possibility to record a short video describing the room will also be very useful.

01 Move back as far as possible to have the widest possible angle of view. Use several different angles to ensure that the full room is easy to perceive.

02 Take the picture in landscape format as it's normally describing the room in a better way

03 Take the pictures from a corner, to get the full view of the room. Ensure also to take one picture of each full wall, the floor (to see the material) and details of furniture you would like to keep.

04 Stay straight, taking as a guide the vertical lines of your room. Make it sort of align your framing.
